We hear much these days about the and this is all well enough if practiced .-But when one State directs its whole policy to the annoyance of another, she ought at least to cease her clamors for "comity."

There is one species of petry meanness which seems to be systematically practiced by our neighbors over the River, or perhaps we ought to say some of them. (for the race of honorable men have not wholly disappeared from that old Commonwealth,) and that is the shipping and ariving into Ohio, to be supported by the charity of our people, her worn-out slaves and innumerable white paupers, made such by the degradation brought upon them in chas of which we now speak.

Our Township and County, is now burdened with a number of these, not only to the energy staxing of our people, but to the corruption of the morals of the youth of the place.

The latest instance is that of a young hopeless ignorance which characterizes so many of what the negroes denominate the "poor white trash" of that State. It seems that she found a den under a rock back of town, where she remained some three weeks, supported by such provisions as was furnished her by those who knew of her retreat, until a week ago, when she was found by the Trustees in a condition that made it their duty under the dictates or humanity to provide for her at the pubhere on a steamer, but does not know the name of the boat, nor who brought her.

Another case is that of a family from Parkersburg. The story the woman tells is, that her husband, who was a mechanic, died several years ago at Parkersburg, leaving her and a large family of children. One daughter is married to a man who is hopelessly infirm, and can never support himself. The authorities of Parkersburg took two of her children, a boy and girl, about thirteen years old from her and bound them to a man at that place, while she and her younger children went, or were sent, to Ohio to shift for themselves. The man to whom her daughter was bound reduced her, and then sent her ruined as she was, and her brother, to their mother at Cincinnati. They returned to Parkersburg to obtain some redress, or at least to find that support in their native county which humanity in all countries professes to give to the unfortunate and destitute. But instead of being cared for there, the whole family were shipped away again and are now here a charge upon the humanity of

Mr. Bosworth, a director of our Infirmay, on learning these facts, sent them home, with a letter to the authorities, and asking them to pay the expenses to which our county had been put in the premises. To this letter he received the following in reply, which we give as a literary curiosity, and Virginia's commentary on the law of comity. We publish the let erexnetly as written, except the names. The precious document is as follows:

Hours of Peril.

In one of his beautiful lectures, George S. Hillard thus depicts the perils of young men in the great cities. Unhappily it is equally applicable to lesser towns; and if we had the ability, we would bring the subject home to the young men who read the Telegraph with a power that would make the impression indelible. If youth, with its exuberant impulses and gushing he expense. She says she was brought sympathies could but realize what the experience of later years will teach, when it will be, in many cases, to late to retrieve the past, how many would be saved from the whirlpool which engulfs its thousands yearly, to become the ornaments of soiety and the benefactors of their race.

"To a young man away from home, riendless and forlorn in a great city, the hours of peril are between sunset and bedtime, for the moon and the stars see more vil in a single hour, than the sun in his whole day's circuit. The poet's visions of evening are all composed of soothing and ender images. It brings the wanderer to his home, the child to its mother's arms, he ox to his stall, and the weary laborer o his rest. But the gentle hearted youth who is thrown upon the rocks of a pitiless city, and stands homeless amid a thousand homes, the approach of evening brings with it an aching sense of loneliness and desolation, which comes down upon the spirit like darkness upon the earth. In his mood his best impulses become a snare to him, and he is led astray because be is social, affectionate, sympathetic and warm-hearted. If there be a young man thus circumstanced, within the sound of my voice, let me say to him that books are friends of the friendless, and that a library s the home of the homeless.
